WHERE FARMING PAYS.

Assiniboia and Alberta, the three great fertile provinces of Northwestern Canada, have perhaps been the most carefully watched portions of the North American continent during the past year. These three provinces have been aptly termed the granaries and pastures of Canada. Manitoba has nearly 74,000,000 acres of the richest soil, peculiarly adapted to the growth of wheat and other cereals. Assiniboia has something over 34,000,000 acres of fat lands specially suitable to mixed farming, and Alberta has 45,000,000 acres of land as fertile as can be found, vast expanses of natural pasture, and broad districts rich in coal, minerals and timber. In these three provinces there is an abundant water supply, furnished by a multitude of lakes, rivers, creeks and springs, and no portion of the globe can claim a more healthful climate, nor one better adapted to the growth of the finest grades of wheat, or to profitable agriculture in all its branches. The past season was a fine illustration of the wonderful advantages and productivity of the country; wheat and other cereals, roots, vegetables, hay, etc., all yielded enormous crops, and there is more genuine prosperity and contentment to-day among the settlers of North-western Canada, than has been recorded in the history of any newly-opened agricultural region.

Among all these millions of acres of fertile lands, free as air to all who seek for new homes upon them, settlers from every nation of Europe, from the older parts of Canada and from many parts of the United States are rapidly securing farms and laying the foundation for a future competency.

Of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for ostarth is daily becoming better known, and people recognize in its use the common-sense method of treating this disease. Local applications can do but little good. Ostarth is constitutional in character and therefore requires a constitutional remedy. Hood's Sarsaparilla attacks the disease at its foundation by eliminating the impurities in the blood which cause and feed it, and by restoring the affected members to healthy condition.
